FASHION FOR PEACE
NEW YORK FASHION SHOWCASE

SABYASACHI MUKHERJEE PARTNERS WITH THE ISHA FOUNDATION

Sabyasachi Mukherjee New York fashion show was a eye catching. His support for Sadhguru and the Isha Foundation's Fashion for Peace project was well supported by the audience.

Sabyasachi Mukherjee joined fellow designers Norma Kamali, Mara Hoffman and Mimi Prober to design a capsule collection that was shown at the Fashion For Peace charity event in New York.

FASH

The event, produced by People's Revolution, included students from the High School of Art and Design, where Kamali is a board member. The school educates a group of talented students and trains them to become artists. The event saw the fashion and spiritual worlds collide with Sadhguru and his foundation working alongside the three established designers.

MARA HOFFMAN

The Isha Foundation, a non-profit organisation founded by Vasudev, has worked on curating over a hundred Indian textiles that have been a part of India's design vocabulary for nearly 5,000 years. Each of the participating designers has worked on creating exclusive looks that will champion the weaves. The presentation will be produced by People's Revolution along with the students of the High School of Art and Design, a New York City public school that aims towards educating and inspiring gifted students to become artists.

Fashion For Peace is a first-time fashion initiative whose mission is to promote conscious and sustainable design while simultaneously supporting global artisans/designers and their work.

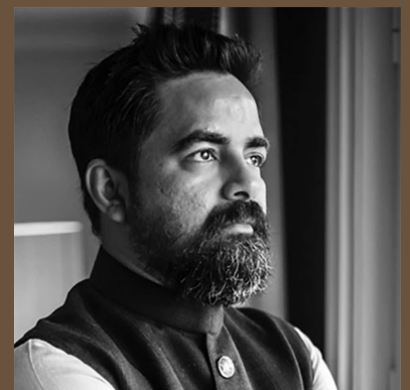

MIMI PROBER

Four leading-edge fashion designers collaborated in the event: Norma Kamali, Maya Hoffman, Sabyasachi Mukherjee and Mimi Prober. Using a selection of rare Indian weaves and fabrics curated by Sadhguru, each designer created exclusive looks to illustrate the exceptional beauty of natural and handmade fabrics.
